Case Studies:

1) You are the president of State University. While drinking your morning coffee, you notice that the top headline of “The Comet” SU’s student newspaper targeting first-year students and sophomores, are alcohol advertisements.

2) You are the hockey coach of Private U. You always check your athlete’s twitter accounts and notice that one of them has posted a picture of himself in blackface.

3) You are the advisor to the Phi Betta Bad Decisions. You open up the Huffington Post to find that your organization authored and circulated an email “Top 10 Ways to Rape.”

4) You, the Chief of Police for State U, just got a call from your university President. Specifically, she was irate after witnessing several members of the Palestinian Student Organization protesting the campus lecture given by the Prime Minister of Israel. The students shouted disrespectful remarks at the Prime Minister, began praying, and then burned American and Israeli flags. Several students were arrested by the University Police Department. The President tells you to inform the students that the Palestinian Student Organization has been immediately disbanded. She wants you to make it clear that it is not because of this incident, but rather because their membership policy does not allow for Israeli students to join.

Recommended Readings:

The First Amendment on Campus, A Handbook for College and University Administrators, Lee Bird, Mary Beth Mackin and Saundra Schuster, 2006