State Colleges seek new educational roles

State colleges traditionally have trained more than half of the nation’s elementary and secondary school teachers. But teaching jobs are drying up, forcing state colleges in consider new educational roles.

Statistics from the Department of Labor project that 24 million job openings for teachers between 1970 and 1980 and 4.3 million newly trained persons will be needed to fill them, if teachers continue to produce at the present rate.

Curriculum planners from about 125 state colleges met here recently to plan academic programs that will better prepare their students for the future job market.

The planners were told that nearly half of the bachelor’s degree awards in 1969-70 were in the major field of education, the projected trend of growth in the number of jobs for school teachers is expected to be 11.8 percent. Jobs also are expected to be relatively plentiful for community colleges, and early childhood teachers.

College representatives at the meeting emphasized the new educational programs that are expected to be in place by 1975. They said that the number of positions available for kindergarten and elementary school teachers is expected to rise only 3.2 percent, between 1968 and 1980, and the number of jobs for secondary school teachers is expected to grow by 20 percent.

However, jobs for rehabilitation counselors are expected to increase by 72.6 percent during the same period and jobs for school counselors are projected to rise by 41.8 percent. Jobs also are expected to be relatively plentiful for community colleges, and early childhood teachers.

Vermont plans to appeal a county court decision that its mandatory supervision and control of the board of education violated the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution. The decision, which was announced last week, had specified that Vermont's mandatory supervision and control of the board of education was contrary to the federal Constitution. President Edward C. Andrews, Jr., said that he would appeal the decision to the Vermont Supreme Court, which has final authority over such matters.

Well, you pay your dues, and if you've never seen a bumper sticker you can't be blamed for not noticing one. They're not exactly eye-catching. They probably do not serve to drum up much sympathy for the cause, and they attract few of the millions of drivers on the highways who see them. They don't call attention to themselves; they're silent, they're sliding down the road.

According to the California Highway Patrol, there are some 400,000 bumper stickers in the state, representing over 2,000 different organizations. Each sticker contains at least one of two slogans: "Get tough on crime" or "Stop littering, it's not a crime." It is estimated that most of the stickers are put up by college students, although teachers, business executives, and even a few state legislators have been known to join in.

The stickers are usually made of a material that will stick to the bumper of a car and will not peel off easily. They are often placed on the bumpers of cars driven by young people, who may feel that they are not old enough to vote but who are willing to take a stand on other issues.

Despite their relatively small size, bumper stickers can have a significant impact. They can help to raise awareness about important issues, and they can also serve as a form of political expression. In some cases, they have even led to changes in laws. For example, the "Get tough on crime" slogan was first introduced in the late 1960s, and it has since become a common sight on the streets of California.

Overall, bumper stickers are a fascinating and underappreciated aspect of modern-day political expression. They are a reminder that even small actions can have a big impact, and that everyone has a role to play in making the world a better place.

ZPG: AN ANSWER?

Zero Population Growth (ZPG) has recently opened a new chapter in the struggle against over-population. ZPG is an organization that seeks to educate the public about the dangers of over-population and to promote solutions to the problem. ZPG has been active since the late 1960s, and it has had a significant impact on public opinion and policy.

The organization has published numerous reports and articles on the issue, and it has organized public events and lectures throughout the country. ZPG's efforts have helped to raise awareness about the problem of over-population, and it has encouraged people to think about ways to find a sustainable future for our planet.

The organization's goals are to reduce population growth and to promote policies that will help to ensure a sustainable future. ZPG is currently working on several projects, including a campaign to encourage states to adopt policies that will limit population growth, and a project to develop a plan for a more sustainable future.

The organization's work is important because the issue of over-population is a major threat to our planet's health and well-being. If we do not take action to address this problem, it could have devastating consequences for our future.

On Tuesday, November 12, elections will be held to fill three of the four new positions as the S.G.A. Council created by an amendment to the Constitution. Increasing class representation from three to four will bring about a more democratic form of student representation.

We urge all eligible students to participate in this crucial election. The Council has been diminished in number, but increased in importance. It is now more necessary than ever to have a strong, representative voice in the student body.

The Student Government Association (S.G.A.) exists to serve the needs of the student body. It is the responsibility of every member to ensure that the Council is functioning effectively.

The Student Union is the heart of the campus, providing a central gathering place for students. It is here that we can find cultural events, social activities, and academic resources.

We encourage all students to take an active role in their campus community. Whether through volunteering, participating in events, or joining clubs, there are many ways to contribute to the success of the Student Union.

Let us work together to ensure that the Student Union remains a vibrant and engaging place for all students.

Letter to the Editor

The Student Union is a powerful force on campus. It provides a space for students to come together and to engage in activities that promote education and personal growth.

POLITICAL FILMS COME OF AGE

If films today have anything in common, it is their current emphasis on social issues. This year we have seen a rise in the number of films that deal with revolutionary themes. In the past, films such as Rebel Without a Cause and Easy Rider were criticized for their lack of political content. However, in recent years, films like The Trial and The Godfather have received much praise for their thoughtful exploration of political themes.

Films in the News

The Trial is a film that was released in 1962 and is based on the novel by Franz Kafka. The film tells the story of a man who is arrested and put on trial for a crime he did not commit. The film was highly praised for its nuanced exploration of political themes, such as the power of the state and the importance of individual rights.

The Godfather is a film that was released in 1972 and is based on the novel by Mario Puzo. The film tells the story of the Corleone family, a powerful Mafia dynasty in New York City. The film was praised for its portrayal of political corruption and its exploration of the relationship between organized crime and government.

SWEDEN: A NICE PLACE TO VISIT

As of July 1971, when I left Sweden, 22 American deserters and war resisters were known to be residing in Sweden. The returns to the old world, tough as they often are, provided a relief from the terrible strictness of the U.S. warship Intrepid. In Sweden, I was living in a country that was relatively sympathetic to American war resisters. Tolerance for those who have opposed this country's involvement in the Vietnam War and the desire to avoid it.

The racism of the Swedish people is relatively low, and the Swedes themselves are generally considered to be very tolerant and open-minded. This is especially true when it comes to individuals who have chosen to leave their home countries for reasons of conscience. In Sweden, I found that most people were very welcoming and friendly.
