The resignation of Dr. Milton L. Boyle, a Bridgewater State College professor, has left many to wonder about the fate of the Religious Studies program.

"At that point the Religious Studies program was facing a crisis," said Boyle. "I had been teaching the majority of Religious Studies courses for several years, and my decision to return to teaching full-time was one goal that I had set for myself." Boyle now teaches all the Religious Studies courses.

Boyle has been successful and now he is looking forward to continuing his work in this field. "I am excited about the future of the Religious Studies program and I am committed to seeing it through," said Boyle. "I am confident that we will be able to develop a program that is responsive to the needs of our students and the community." Boyle is already working on a new curriculum that will provide students with a deeper understanding of religious thought and practice.

Boyle's resignation has also prompted a review of the Religious Studies program. The Department of Humanities has been called in to look at the situation and make recommendations.

Colleges and Universities: A National Survey of Student Financial Aid

As of press time, it had yet to be determined whether the Religious Studies program would be cancelled. "We will have to rely on the good faith of the administration in making the decision," said Boyle. "I am confident that they will make the right decision for the betterment of the college and the students." Boyle is committed to seeing that the Religious Studies program continues to thrive.

Edward Elias
1930-1979

Mr. Edward Elias, Grant Coordinator and Veterans Affairs Officer, died on Monday, October 1, 1979. Elias had been a member of the Religious Studies program since 1952. He received his Masters of Science Foundation Grant in 1958.

Elias began his teaching career in Somerset, Fall River and Taunton, teaching grades 7-12 and in the United States and in Europe.

Elias' death was a great loss to the Religious Studies program and to the college as a whole. "Elias was a dedicated and hardworking employee," said Boyle. "He was always willing to do whatever was necessary to ensure the success of the Religious Studies program. We will miss him greatly."

Minority Opportunities

One way is with the Minority Graduate Student Locator Service (MGSLS) and offered by the Graduate School Records Office. Through this free service, college students seeking graduate schools can find information about graduate programs that meet their needs. The MGSLS also provides a valuable resource for graduate schools looking for students from diverse backgrounds.

A graduate student establishes a record at the college or university where he or she is a member of racial and ethnic minority groups and is interested in graduate study. As part of the Graduate School Records Office, students can find resources for financial aid. The names of students who use the Graduate School Records Office and meet the criteria are placed in the Locator file automatically at the time of admission. Students who want to make information available to graduate schools must take the appropriate form in by November 12. A list of participating graduate schools is provided to students and is available at the Graduate School Records Office.

The Locator service is designed to locate and seek admission to a suitable graduate program and to find resources for financial aid. It is designed only to help students find graduate schools that meet their needs. The Locator service is not an application to graduate school or financial aid. Students should make sure they are aware of the terms of the financial aid they are receiving and that they understand the implications of accepting aid from different sources.
