Students Active in Model U.N.

Bridgewater students actively participate in various civic and academic activities. For instance, the Harvard Model United Nations hosted a conference involving students from Bridgewater College. This conference, which took place in New York, involved discussions on various global issues such as health, physical education, and sports. The event was part of the International Affairs Council and allowed participants to engage in mock simulations of real-world scenarios such as the United Nations and other international bodies.

Election Survey

Professor Alan Hantz conducted an election survey involving BSC students and alumni to explore voter behavior and preferences. The survey aimed to understand the factors that influence voting decisions, including demographic characteristics, political ideology, and media exposure. The findings were presented in the form of a model, which was later validated through further research.

Organizing Demonstration

BSC Club Organizes a Demonstration in support of South Shore Plaza on Saturday. The demonstration was supported by faculty, students, and alumni, highlighting the importance of civic engagement and community support.

Women in Combat "devastating effects"

Dear Editor,

I am disturbed by the recent articles on women in combat in The Comment. It is disturbing to me that The Comment has chosen to focus on this issue without giving any consideration to the perspective of those women who are already serving in combat roles.

Women have been serving in combat roles for centuries, and there are many who are proud of the service they have provided. It is important to recognize the contributions of these women and to support them in their efforts.

Sincerely,

Letters to the Editor

Women in Combat

"devastating effects"

Dear Editor,

I was very disappointed to read the article "Women in Combat" in the November issue of The Observer. The article made several claims about the effects of women in combat that I believe are not supported by the available evidence.

Firstly, the article states that women are less capable than men in combat situations. However, numerous studies have shown that women are just as capable as men in terms of physical fitness and combat readiness. In fact, some studies have even found that women may have an advantage in certain combat situations.

Secondly, the article suggests that women are more likely to experience psychological trauma as a result of combat. While it is true that combat can be psychologically traumatic for anyone, there is no evidence to suggest that women are more susceptible to trauma than men. In fact, some studies have found that women may be less likely to experience certain types of combat-related trauma.

Lastly, the article implies that women in combat would have a negative impact on the morale of military units. However, there is no evidence to suggest that the presence of women in combat units would have a negative impact on morale. In fact, studies have shown that diverse military units can actually have a positive impact on team cohesion and readiness.

In conclusion, while women may face unique challenges in combat, they are just as capable and just as likely to experience the same types of trauma as men. The media should be responsible in its portrayal of women in combat, and should not make exaggerated claims about the negative effects of women in this role.

Sincerely,

Praise for "a work of art"

Dear Editor,

I recently had the opportunity to attend the performance of "A Work of Art" at the Performing Arts Center. The performance was absolutely stunning, and I am still in awe of the talent on display.

The actors brought their characters to life in a way that was both captivating and believable. The set design was nothing short of remarkable, and the lighting and music perfectly complemented the performances. The audience was completely captivated throughout the entire show.

I highly recommend "A Work of Art" to anyone who appreciates the arts. It is a truly remarkable production that I will not soon forget.

Sincerely,

Ayatollah Khomeini “stalling”

It seems the revolutionary populace is still waiting for Ayatollah Khomeini to name a successor. While the Ayatollah is reported to have named several candidates, including Hassan Rouhani and Mohsen Rezaie, there is no official statement confirming the appointment. This lack of action is causing concern among those who have supported the Ayatollah's proposal.

A Look at the President

By Leon Wilkhite

- Election time, and the winning is easy. That's what some President, Jimmy Carter seems to think. It's easy because he knows that the American public will show their support for a candidate while the voters show their patriotism in the midst of trouble.

Carter seems to think. He hides in the White House, puts on a mock administration expects it to continue. What caused it? Deregulation of the Presidency. He is a weak man in this country's highest office, and it is the oil companies. The price of a gallon of gas is almost double what it was a year ago. The oil companies are reporting their biggest profits ever and claim that most of it came from overseas sales and will be invested in the search for more oil. Do you really think that Exxon will invest a large amount of its 4 billion dollar profit in oil exploration? Mobil Inc. Meanwhile, the government says to drive less, insulated your home, turn off the water to keep it warm, and... even that isn't enough.

A Look at the President

By Sean Crockett

Television, the winning is easy. That's what President Jimmy Carter wants to hear. But he's been looking for more than that since his inauguration. The President and his staff have been working hard to improve relations with foreign countries and to prepare for a possible war. The President's speeches and public appearances have been focused on these issues.

First, some facts: The President is a Baptist, and he has been married to his wife, Rosalynn, for 30 years. He has two children, Amy and Donnell. Carter was born in Plains, Georgia, and he attended Antioch College in Yellow Springs, Ohio. After graduating from college, he worked as a lawyer in his hometown of Plains.

Carter ran for the presidency in 1976 and became the 39th President of the United States in January 1977. During his first term, he faced many challenges, including the energy crisis, the Iran hostage crisis, and the rise of Islamic fundamentalism in the Middle East.

The President is a strong advocate for human rights worldwide and has worked to improve the lives of people in developing countries. He has also been an active supporter of nuclear disarmament and has called for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

In his second term, Carter faced the Iran hostage crisis and the energy crisis again. He was criticized for his economic policies and his handling of the Iran hostage crisis.

Carter is a member of the Democratic Party and has been a Campaigner for many years. He has been a strong supporter of civil rights and has worked to improve the quality of education in the United States.

Carter has been a strong advocate for peace and has worked to improve relations with foreign countries. He has been a strong supporter of human rights and has worked to improve the lives of people in developing countries.

In conclusion, Jimmy Carter is a strong advocate for peace and human rights. He has been a strong supporter of civil rights and has worked to improve the quality of education in the United States. He has been a strong advocate for nuclear disarmament and has called for a comprehensive test ban treaty.

BSC Club Organizes Demonstration

A large group of BSC students and faculty from the Department of Health, Physical Education, and Recreation gathered at the South Shore Plaza on Saturday, March 7, to give an opening address to the participants of National Physical Education and Sport Week.

The demonstration featured athletic fitness, adventure physed education (including a display on the Children's Physical Development Center, a film on heart disease, and a resume of the events that led up to the general assembly). Before Fraser presented the opening address, the students discussed the issues of nutrition, diet, smoking, and living with chronic disease.

B.U.S. represented the third world Central African nation of Chad. Once the assignment was received, two weeks of intense preparation began.

A U.S. member of the Rhodes and Federal Committee, the committee that oversees the annual conference and plans for the next year, discussed the issues of primary health care and the rights of the Third World nations. The committee decided that the rights of the Third World states must be upheld, and the delegate agreed to make sure the issues of primary health care were addressed.

BSC, a U.S. nation, was represented on the National Physical Education and Sport Week. The delegates discussed the issues of nutrition, diet, smoking, and living with chronic disease.

Professor Conducts Election Survey

Dr. Alisa Haas of the Department of Speech Communication, Theatre Arts, and Communication Studies conducted a survey of Massachusetts Democratic primary elections from Monday, February 15 through Friday, March 2. Dr. Haas drew up a questionnaire, which was used to conduct the study, and reported the following findings:

1. The Kelley-Miller Model of Voting Behavior. Dr. Haas explained that this model suggests that voting behavior can be predicted with a high degree of accuracy by the degree of agreement between a person's political beliefs and the issues at stake. The model suggests that people are more likely to support candidates who agree with their beliefs and that the level of agreement is related to the level of support.

2. The Agenda Setting Model of Mass Media Effect. Dr. Haas described the model as holding that "people who think of the issues are more likely to support candidates who agree with their beliefs and that the level of agreement is related to the level of support." The model suggests that people are more likely to support candidates who agree with their beliefs and that the level of agreement is related to the level of support.

3. A Theory Based on Behavioral Theory of Communication. This theory measures the degree of agreement between a person's political beliefs and the issues at stake. The model suggests that people are more likely to support candidates who agree with their beliefs and that the level of agreement is related to the level of support.
