Boyden Windows...State Slipup?

by Ollie Bliss

The other retracions of Boyden Hall in a press conference on Monday, October 26, have been raised recently concerning the new windows. The problem, basically, is that when the building was originally built circa 1928, it was styled in American Georgian revival, meaning white columns, white trim, and white windows. It would harken to the original, but the fact is that the windows are still brown.

It is important to remember, however, that the building was not completed in its entirety until the 1930s. The school was completed in 1933, but many classrooms and areas were added later. The windows were not completed until the 1940s.

It is also important to note that the windows were not designed by the architect of the building, but by a different firm. The architect of the building was Peter Y. Flynn, who also designed the nearby Devereux School. The windows were designed by Boyden Windows, who were also responsible for the windows of the nearby Devereux School.

The problem with the windows is that they do not match the style of the building. The windows are brown, while the original style was white. The school administration has been aware of this problem for some time, but has not taken action to correct it.

The windows are not the only problem with the building. There are also issues with the plumbing, electrical, and heating systems. The school administration has been aware of these problems for some time, but has not taken action to correct them.

The school administration has been aware of these problems for some time, but has not taken action to correct them. The problems are significant, and will require a significant amount of money to correct.

Pest Control Investigated

I'm beginning to wonder if Santa Claus were present at the first Thanksgiving with the Pilgrims and Indians. Sitting around the table full of food presents us with the problem of thanksgiving, one of the hardest of all the Thanksgiving traditions. We, the college students, are expected to thanksgiving and to give this year's dinner. Is it in our tradition or all of the Christmas traditions?

This year, a new tradition has been introduced. "The Great Hill" has been set up in the center of the campus. It seems to be a popular activity among the students. People are lining up to buy their tickets and then they are allowed to go up the hill and see the view.

The hill is not very high, but it provides a great view of the campus and the surrounding area. People are enjoying themselves and having a good time. It's a new and exciting activity for the college students.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Certain recent events in our nation have once again raised the question of whether the American Dream is still alive and well. The recent economic downturn has had a profound impact on our society. It has affected everyone in some way, and it has caused many people to question the basic assumptions upon which our country was founded.

I believe that it is important for us to continue to reflect on the values that have made our country great. I encourage all of us to think about how we can work together to ensure that the American Dream remains alive and well for future generations.

Dear Editor,

I am writing to express my concern about the state of the American Dream today. It seems to me that the values that have made our country great are being lost in the face of economic downturns and political uncertainty.

I'm beginning to wonder if Santa Claus was present at the first Thanksgiving with the Pilgrims and Indians. Sitting around the three-course meal, the Indians presented to the new arrivals the good things from the soil, and so it seems that running water is a good thing to have. I'm not sure if my expectations are too high, but I do see some benefits from having running water. It just seems all the calculated. You will find all the calculation from the Thanksgiving benefit from having running water. You are also associated with the cleanness of the soil and the rains from having running water. I mean, what's the point of having running water if it's not going to be used properly? I am concerned about the cleanliness of the soil and the rains from having running water. I also see the benefits from having running water.
