A graduate of the University of Notre Dame, Professor Droege earned a B.S. in Geology, a M.A. in Art History, an M.A.T. in teaching, and a M.F.A. in Printmaking. He has studied color photography at Harvard University under Marie Cosindas, and landscape photography with Elliot Porter. His favorite subject is mountain photography which he has studied both in this country and in Wales, U.K. under Philip Evans, a Welchman, who is one of Britain's leading landscape photographers.

I do not think of the camera as "capturing" the land, the tree, the rock. I think of it as rather "liberating" my experience for other people. I have taken many photographs that give me great pleasure, but my favorites are those which make people want to go out and see for themselves what I have seen.
