1990 Article about Angela Bowen's Black Entertainment Television appearance

Mark Sullivan

Follow this and additional works at: https://vc.bridgew.edu/jiws

Part of the Women's Studies Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://vc.bridgew.edu/jiws/vol22/iss8/54

This item is available as part of Virtual Commons, the open-access institutional repository of Bridgewater State University, Bridgewater, Massachusetts.
Black Entertainment Television talk show tackles Gay issues

by Mark Sullivan

Is the black community more homophobic than other communities? No, according to three Gay activists featured this week on Black Entertainment Television’s nightly talk show Our Voices.

“I don’t think there is that much homophobia in the black community than anywhere else,” said Angela Bowen, co-chair of the National Coalition for Black Lesbians and Gays. “But I do find that it is more direct. It is more, uh, direct because there are already discriminatory attitudes in so many ways.”

Tuesday’s show was the second to deal directly with Gay issues. Producer Stuart Perkins said the past show focused on the problems facing the black Gay community. Two callers have dealt with AIDS, and two upcoming programs will deal with female impersonation and transsexuals.

The games on Tuesday’s show agreed that many Gays are reluctant to come out because the black community’s response is often to isolate them.

“Now get the shot out,” said Barbara Smith, publisher at the Boston-based Kitchen Table Press, “put out of something that is not your ground.”

But they also agreed that the fear of isolation is not the only fear black Gays have about acknowledging their sexuality. Another fear is potential violence.

“I knew I was different when I was five,” said poet Essex Hemphill. “As I grew older, I also knew that what I was was dangerous for me. I knew that being flamboyant, like switching or carrying a potholder, could get me beat up.”

Bowen said some black Gays don’t know that people with similar feelings exist, while others don’t know how to find them.

“I didn’t come out as a Lesbian until I was 50,” Bowen said. “Until then, I wasn’t aware that there was a word for what I was. There were no role models at that time.”

Bowen said she “found out what I was missing” when she read the works of women’s Lesbian writers like poet Audrea Lorde.

“I could finally see that this thing real-ly did exist,” Bowen said. “I could also see that I am still close friends with, was here where I belonged.”

Bowen said that, despite the fear associated with coming out, she feels black Gays should jump in.

“Come on out, the water’s fine,” Bowen said. “The world is so out of what it should be. You never have to worry! Do that one know, should you call that one?”

“It’s not that we don’t take a tick,” said Smith. “It’s just that they don’t compare them.”

But black Gay role models are still difficult to find, Hemphill said. The homosexuality of many historical figures, even those who were openly Gay, like civil rights activist Bayard Rustin and novelist James Baldwin, has been “carefully guarded with whispers and silence.”

One viewer of the call-in program said he believed homosexuality was a European phenomenon and that there was no such thing as homosexuality in ancient African cultures.

“I don’t want to go back in history,” said Bowen. “My family were slaves in history.”

Bowen said Kenya burned Lesbians from a 1985 conference held at the University of Nairobi because “there were no Gay people in Africa.” She said she and a few others stayed anyway, and dozens of Gays came up to them and told them about how severely they had to guard their sexuality.

“I don’t believe that there weren’t black Lesbians and Gays in every part of history,” Bowen said. “People who say that don’t know history.”

Another caller asked how to make black Lesbians and Gay men more visible. The guests suggested joining “some of the staunch old organizations,” like the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

“You might cause some of them to have a heart attack,” Hemphill said, joking, “but that’s what you get the old people as die off and let new people come on.”

Bowen suggested that starting a group where no groups for black Gays currently exist.

“Get one or two friends together at Pride Day and make a banner that says BLACK LESBIANS LOOKING FOR MORE,” Bowen said.

They also encouraged black Gay organizations to build coalitions with other progressive groups, like women’s groups.

“Sexism and homophobia come from the same room,” Smith said. “Racism are the same people who are after us for being Gay. The right wing knows this, because they hate us all. And we all hate each other, We need to build together.”

Black Entertainment Television’s Our Voices will present programs on transcendental and female impersonators in April, and also plans to issue a Gay karaoké program sometime this summer.

For dates and times, call (202) 636-2066.

Journal of International Women’s Studies Vol. 22, No. 8 August 2021