Conrad Aiken
Biographical Sketch

Conrad Potter Aiken was born in Savannah, Georgia on August 5, 1889. The tragic fate of his father and mother, originally from Massachusetts, greatly shaped his life when in 1901 a murder-suicide left him parentless. He moved to Massachusetts where he would eventually attend Harvard University. While at Harvard, Aiken was President of the Harvard Advocate and co-editor with T.S. Eliot. According to the Advocate’s webpage, “The Harvard Advocate, founded in 1866, is the oldest continuously published collegiate literary magazine in the country. Over its past 146 years, it can count T.S. Eliot, Conrad Aiken, and Norman Mailer among its members and e.e. cummings, Jack Kerouac, and Tom Wolfe as contributors to its pages.” This would begin a lifetime of interactions with renowned poets for Aiken, as well as a successful career as a poet and novelist.

Aiken spent much time in Europe between his years after Harvard and 1930. He first married in 1912 to Jessie McDonald, whom he had three children with: John, Jane, and Joan. Shortly after his marriage to his first wife ended in 1929 (he would remarry two more times), he received the Pulitzer Prize in 1930 for his work Selected Poems. Other awards he would win throughout his life included the Shelley Memorial Award (the award’s first recipient), National Medal for Literature, the Gold Medal for Poetry from the American Academy of Arts and Letters, the Bollingen Prize, and the National Book Award. From 1950-1952 he was the Poetry Consultant to the Library of Congress, now known as the U.S. Poet Laureate. Aiken also edited Emily Dickinson’s Selected Poems in 1924, which proved to be largely responsible for establishing her posthumous literary reputation.

In 1947 Aiken moved to Brewster, MA on Cape Cod. While here, he and his wife Mary ran a summer school for writing and painting called Forty-One Doors, with Conrad working with the writers and Mary working with the painters. Aiken’s long and distinguished career concluded in 1973 when he passed away in Savannah, Georgia.
Conrad Aiken
Scope and Content Note

Aiken was well known for his letters, which is the strength of this collection. The correspondence from Conrad and his wife Mary are to Maureen Connelly, the donor of the collection. The collection contains a personal interview Mrs. Connelly did with Conrad Aiken, as well as numerous book reviews she wrote of his works, and reviews from others on Aiken’s works. A number of Aiken’s publications, including many that are inscribed, are in the collection, as well as works by authors that wrote about Aiken’s life. Correspondence and publications from Aiken’s children can be found, making the collection reflect Conrad Aiken’s entire family, not just himself. The numerous photographs of the Aiken’s by the donor show the author at a later stage in his life.
