Club to Enact

Tragedy and Farce

The dramatic club, under the supervision of Miss Irma Low will present in chapel on November fifth, a one-act play, "Where the Cross is Made", by Eugene O'Neil. Its second presentation will be a comedy-farce in three acts—"Where's My Money?"—on Friday evening, November thirteenth.

"Where the Cross is Made" is the tragic story of a shipwrecked captain and his family. The club expects that Rosalie Lynch, Philip Parmahn, Fredric Ketor, William Scully, and Gordon McRice will make it a very unique chapel program.

Great things are expected of the deminishing—but-financially-submissive Benjamin Bump, when he portray one of the leading characters, and of Alice Blanchfield, as his wife, Virginia Lucey and James Peebles should provide much interest as lovers and the love scenes.

Edith James and Frank Bailey, with the dimpled smile, are eagerly anticipated. Helen Robertson plays the part convincingly of a horse doctor who cures a cow, and little Mildred Goldstein is the naughty girl who eats a whole cake in one evening. Fredric Ketor dons a Spanish accent and helps Mary Moore and Arnold Levine as supporting characters.

S. C. A. Will Give

Freshman Banquet

The freshman banquet which is held each year in the gymnasium under the sponsorship of the Student Cooperative Association is being planned for Thursday, November 5, at 4:30 P. M. Phyllis Roberts of the senior class is general chairman and Rita Murphy of the junior class is in charge of the banquet.

Each division has been asked to compose a song peculiar to that division. The songs will be sung during the party as will their entries in the class song contest. Many members of the faculty will be there and should be amused by each division's presentation of stunts.

Training School

Adds New Teacher

Miss Mona Morris, who graduated from Bridgewater in 1893 and taught in the second and third grades of Byannis Teachers College Training School is now teaching in the first grade of the Training School at Bridgewater.

The system of training in Hyannis of the second and third grades is followed here. Students planning to teach in the elementary grades receive their practice teaching in the training school those interested in higher grades teach in the junior high program.

Students observe at the training school in one room for about a week and then teach there for two weeks. From their first room they pass to the next room and so on until they have trained in each of the elementary grades.

There are two hundred children in the school, ten teachers and a principal. Students last year attended several regular classes while they were training; that is, they might teach in the morning and, go back to regular classes in the afternoon. However, the system is not entirely set, and constant changes are being made.

Miss Morris is very fond of young children and is enthusiastic about her work with them. In asking her what she most enjoyed about the work she replied, "It is very interesting to me to watch the growth of children in the first grade. They start with little knowledge, they might say, but at the end of the year, one can easily see how well they have grasped new ideas and how their minds have developed throughout the school year."

New Lecture Fund

Presents Ensemble

The Boston Woodwind Ensemble, sponsored by the new lecture fund committee, presented to the students of the college a program of flute selections on Wednesday afternoon, October 28, 1936. The group, composed of six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rendered the numbers in a forceful and accomplished manner.

The ensemble included George Laurent, flute; Fernand Gillet, oboe; Victor Polatschek, clarinet; Raymond Allard, bassoon; and William Valk, principal bassoon. They were assisted at the piano by Paul Bregor.

The only composition played by the ensemble was "Sextette in B flat" composed by J. B. Tosti. The music was rendered by the flute and oboe with piano accompaniment. The program was introduced by the flute "Concertino" composed by Coccie Chominade and played by George Laurent. The "Sonate" by Vittorio for flute, oboe and bassoon was also played.

The program was brought to a close by the rendition of Mozart's "Quintet in B Flat" for piano, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and French horn.

Greetings Exchanged

At Open House

It has become a delightful and hospitable tradition for the dormitories to hold "open house" in the autumn, to give the parents and friends of the students an opportunity of personal contact with the faculty members and the typical college life of the school.

This year it was held under the general chairmanship of Phyllis Roberts, on Sunday afternoon, October 30. Tea was served from 3 to 5:30 o'clock in the reception room at Tillington Hall; a true fall atmosphere was lent by the bowls of bittersweet and rusty-hued chrysanthemums. The guests were entertained by Murial Hatchfield at the marimba. Tea was poured by Miss Mona Morris, now member of the training school staff, Miss Ruth Davis, Miss Olive Lovett, and Miss Caldwell, Katherine Donohue, president of the Student Cooperative Association and Harriet Robinson, president of Dormitory Council.

The guests were received by Doris Thomas, vice-president of Tillington Hall and Edith Fiske, vice-president of Woodward, who were hostesses for the respective dormitories.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The President

The belief that "all men are created equal" is one of the foremost considerations in America, and its meaning was strongly brought home to us as we watched the President of the United States ride through our streets October 21. Those who had never seen him before expressed amazement that such a prominent person should look exactly as they expected him to. To most of us, any president is quite a remote person, and on that afternoon any partisan sentiment was submerged in a feeling of deep respect for any man—an ordinary human being like ourselves—who has the ability and the courage to occupy the highest position in the land.

Citizens in the Making

Students below voting age take little interest in politics and campaign issues according to the report of a recent survey. Although the average age of our students is considerably less than twenty-one, this statement does not seem to apply to Bridge water. Anyone who has the courage to take a definite stand on a political matter is sure to become involved in an argument, for we have among us supporters of practically every faction in the coming election.

Occasionally a discussion becomes a little heated, but generally it is a friendly exchange of knowledge and ideas carried on banteringly and with much enthusiasm. Such a controversial subject. The existence of such interest among students, if it is widespread, is a good omen, for these students are to be the future citizens of our country.

By studying the platform, each one should earnestly resolve to co-operate and give his individual support to this very important college activity.

Co-operation

Again our problem has come to the fore—Chapel attendance is falling off. Every year this question is discussed giving rise to various comments both favorable and unfavorable. Should we make church compulsory again under the old system, taking attendance and accounting for absences? Should we continue under our present plan whereby everybody is expected to go to chapel unless he has a good excuse? Should chapel be abolished or held less often?

We never seem to agree, but regardless of arguments there should be agreement on one subject. Whatever the situation regarding chapel attendance, it should receive the wholehearted support of every member of the student body.

Suggestions for chapel programs are welcome, for the wishes of the students are the first consideration in this matter. A great deal of interest and hard work goes into every program and the result is always an improvement to those who attend regularly.

Whatever the conditions, each one should earnestly resolve to co-operate and give his individual support to this very important college activity.

“Diets and Riots”

“Diets and Riots”, an interpretation of the history of Harvard University one of the most unusual and entertaining books that a true Epicurean should enjoy. As its introduction suggests, “this little book is neither exhaustive nor exhausting. It attempts to trace, with fidelity to fact, the story of Harvard’s three hundred years of eating for food and knowledge.” But as one reads through the few more than one hundred pages, he will be impressed by Harvard’s hunger for food more than for knowledge.

Good food, the sure keynote to Harvard’s first presidents. Resulted in the “collegiate way of living” which merely meant to dine with one’s fellows. Yet many were the failures among the first few presidents because they did not realize that “although man does not live by bread alone” a good dinner, nevertheless, “gives content to all”. Of course, it is a generally known fact that in the early days of the college, knowledge gained there was paid for in produce. At times was rather embarrassing for both president and instructors, as in bountiful years they had more corn than could be consumed and in drought years, when intense heat burned the corn, more meat than could be cared for. Excess for wool and sugar was difficult and to give their excess food to the college table meant a personal sacrifice of that was their salary. Increase Mather, bearing a grudge against certain food stuffs, made legislative arrangements for them to 1525. By 1638 the company paid for in produce. At times this resulted in the “collegiate way of living”, decreed its banishment from the yard.

But do not think that this book contains only the history of a diet-conscious school, for, after the stomach had been satisfied, the imps of Harvard became entangled in riots of protest and delicate nature than those we hear of today. With due respects to the author, for he can tell a good story, I quote the following example of the political spirit of the time. It reads: “The Age of Inventions brought to the College Fire Department a real fire engine. Whether this machine was animate or inanimate is a matter of some doubt, for a student records ‘this day I turned out to exercise the engine’. In order to keep the old machine in training an old house was set on fire. The deprecations of the apparatus delayed its reaching the scene of operations until the neighbors had almost extinguished the blaze. Then, while the villagers labored to put out the fire, the College boys pumped water on the neighbors who had so inconsiderately intruded upon their prerogatives.”

This is just one example of the forms of horseplay that the boys turned to for entertainment. This book is not a great one nor are its sketches. Its usefulness, especially to students, is in its portrayal of college students since the founding of the first college in the new world up to the present day.

To the Forum:

I rise in defense of the so-called “plugs” — the students who have the good sense to do what should be done. They are the people who lend a truly collegiate spirit to the college.

I do not stand alone in thinking that the prevalent attitude of most of the college students toward studying is evidence. Some students would rather abandon their duties than have hurled at them the most horrible of epithets — “Joe Plugs”. The night of a textbook or a pile of papers causes some of our future teachers to stalk off, scornfully kisssing between clenched jaws — “Public enemy”!

There is more to college life than kick-upped saddle shoes, late permissions and Friday evening socials. We are here as an expense to someone for a purpose — to prepare ourselves for a profession. Let’s be more professional then, and give the respect and admiration due to those who have the foresight and ambition to keep standing of our college a high one.

To the Forum:

This comment is being made concerning Friday, the day when everybody wants to get started for home at three-thirty. Because of the poor parking arrangements at the rear of the school and because of the new parking laws, we have this resulting condition — the cars parked against the Administration Building are parked together bumper to bumper. Until Ford invents side motion, many cars will remain, if the driver of the key car at the head of the line remains unmoved. All this could be prevented, we believe, through better planning and arrangements of parking methods in the near future. We may be able to leave at the time that we choose.

BridgeWater Has A Suicide

If Harvard can have a homicide—surely no one will deny BridgeWater a suicide!

Are you willing to cooperate? Now—first, we need a volunteer. Someone with an examination pending—or, for that matter, anyone who feels reckless for any old reason at all—at all.

To give our novel a really dramatic touch, leave us a note of some kind—what if you please. We don't care what you write the note about, but it would be in keeping with the original idea to state the exact course of your self-destruction.

To make it easier for you (we don't want to thwart any possibilities you could blame it on—oh—blame it on — well — you could say: love of school, or something; or: fear of school, or something: oh, oh— we have it! What about financial worries! Why we, ourselves, could write a note the size of a Hygien pamphlet on that subject! No! We won't commit suicide ourselves! Campus Comment needs us—and furthermore—we have to write this novel didn't it.

A Suicide

Gordon Rice and John Drzewiagels are freedom of the class have succeeded in earning first string positions on this year's varsity soccer team. The first game was against Brown on October 16 and we won 2-1. The next game was against Dartmouth on October 23 and we won 3-0. The next game is against Harvard and we hope to win.

John Tobin, D1, George Harris, D2, Joan Lindsay, D3, Barbara Prince, D4, and Jean Taylor, D5, were elected division representatives to this year's Freshman class on Wednesday, October 14.

We extend our hearty congratulations.

The freshmen, under the direction of William Skulley and Harold Zeoli, organized a class football team. Mindful of the sack rush, they worked hard in preparation for the forthcoming game.

Freshmen Elect Representatives

The freshmen have elected their class representatives, one from each division, who will represent them at student government meetings, in classes, and at all other times.

From D1 John Tobin, BridgeWater, has been chosen; from D2 George Harris, Palmer; from D3 Jean Lindsay, Weymouth; from D4 Barbara Prince, Westfield; and from D5 Jean Taylor, Westward. The class officers will not be elected until after the freshman banquet so that there will be more time for acquaintance.

Our Constitution

This is the essence of a no decision debate between S. Miles Bouton, foreign correspondent for the Baltimore Sun and John Dzenewaigis. S. Miles Bouton, a firm believer in the Constitution, claims that the other organ in use today does as much for the people as this one. Only a minority respects this document as outmoded and intends to give it more power, as this minority desires, would be only one prerequisite of dictatorship.

We cannot invest any more power in Congress, says Bouton, as it is a "rubber stamp" group which retaliates to the whims of its leader. The theoretical rights of the Constitution, right to free speech, press and assembly, function constantly and the attempt to keep these laws running is obviously through the pressures of the Supreme Court, of the Supreme Court, the Gag Laws of Louisiana and Minnesota.

Finally, if we feel our Constitution does not function, it is not as a matter of fault and not the Constitution. The "best instrument in the world loses its usefulness in the hands of a bungler."

Spivak, arguing that the Constitution does not function for the people, used the premise that the judiciary, one of its three components, functions only to protect property rights over human rights. We have two classes of people in this country, "those who own and those who own...and it is the 'latter' group which is the majority. Yet, if we were to look at the decisions of the Supreme Court, we would realize that this unit functions for the former grouping and not the latter.

The Northern states, during the pre-Civil War days, passed laws allowing an escaped slave to remain there as a free man. Yet the Supreme Court—as in the Dred Scott Decision—declared the law to be unconstitutional. In the South, the negro and the poor white, who cannot vote because of the inability to pay a poll tax.

Finally, the judicial power behind the Constitution seems to be that unit which hinders its proper functioning for the people. This is not to be, as can be drawn from given facts, etc., it is our fault to have permitted this situation to exist.

Highlights of Men's Sports

The first four games of the season were hardly high spots for Bridgewater's soccer team. Opening impressively with a 9 to 0 win over Nichols Junior College, they bowed servilely with a 4 to 1 score and went down fighting before New Bedford Textile. Interestingly, Nichols' backs put in two against themselves. Accurately placed corner kicks by Horton and Ehrhardt three, and Nichols' backs put in two. The second half was literally tragic. Another long one by a half-back fell in unhindered for the third score. "Buckeye Joe" Nash went in at goal and made a succession of brilliant saves, but finally the home team's forward line swung around him and the ball was blazed by so fast he hardly had time to see it.

This game was a demonstration of Bridgewater's ability to a new low, so low, in fact, that there can possibly be no more poor soccer left in its system, so that a vast improvement is the only possibility for future games. Ironclad was the fact that the player most disgusted with himself was center half-back "Jimmy" DiNardo, who showed more fight than all of the rest of the (team?) put together.

"How did Medvets make our goal?" That is the greeting given homing soccer players rather than the traditional, "Who won?"

Charlie's exploits are better news, anyway. At Nichols, the police objected, not only because a single headlight was broken, but also because the other was dragging along the ground, and at M.I.T. he arrived at the dressing room fifteen minutes after game-time and on the way home, removed the bundles from a young lady's arms as without removing said arms from the rest of her; going to New Bedford, two flats made him late for the starting whistle; and on the Springfield trip, he actually arrived on time—thanks to Luddy's bus service—but narrowly escaped having his harmonica rammed down his throat as he swung from Christmas carols to ballads and national anthems.

CAMPUS COMMENT

The annual conference of the Women's Athletic Associations of all State Teachers Colleges is to be held in Westfield, Massachusetts, November 6, 7 and 8.

The students elected to represent Bridgewater at this conference are Margaret Buckley, president of W. A. A. and a senior; Kathleen Kelly, a junior; and Geraldine Behan, a sophomore. They will be accompanied by Miss Lois Decker, and Miss Mary Caldwell, hands of the Physical Education Department.

Outstanding opponent of the B. T. C. soccer team, so far, has been Li-Chinese full-back for M. I. T. who handled a wet ball throughout a whole game, driving it far down the field and never once miss-kicking.

All the A. A. are sorry to see Larry Hanlon, its like able secretary, drop out of school. He deserves credit for getting out as soon as he learned that teaching was not his line, but we can't forget that he was a top-notch classmate and, incidentally, an ideal roommate.
