Dear Dr. Rondleau,

As the representative of the students of Bridgewater State College, we are compelled to express our disapproval of every aspect of the new language policies, as they are inconsistent with the standards that we had thought were in place.

We have repeatedly stated our desire that the college foster an environment that is conducive to open dialogue and honest exchange of ideas. The current changes, however, are a direct violation of this principle.

The decision to require students to take a foreign language course as part of their curriculum is arbitrary and unreasonable. It is not based on any objective criteria, but rather on the subjective judgment of those in power. This is a violation of the principle of due process and a violation of the principle of freedom of speech.

Furthermore, we believe that the college has a responsibility to provide a safe and inclusive environment for all students. The current changes are not aligned with this principle, and we believe that they should be reversed.

We ask that you reconsider this decision and work with us to create a more inclusive and equitable environment for all students.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
State Colleges Becoming Stable
By Larry A. Van Ope
State-supported four-year colleges and universities, which absorbed much of the force of the big enrollment explosion in the 1960s, appear now to be following private institutions into a sort of stasis—or in some cases, decline—and state higher-education officials say they are probably not ready to follow the federal pattern of support for public higher education.

State institutions, like their private counterparts, are facing the problem of cutting back on enrollment, and private institutions, like their public counterparts, are facing the problem of finding enough funds to support their students. But the problems are not identical, and the solutions are likely to be different.

State officials say they are not yet ready to follow the federal pattern of support for public higher education. They are concerned about the long-term viability of their institutions, and they are concerned about the future of higher education in general.

Federal Budget
The federal budget is currently under discussion in Congress, and it is possible that the federal government will provide less support for public higher education in the future. This could have a significant impact on state colleges and universities, which rely heavily on federal funding.

The Future of Higher Education
The future of higher education is uncertain, and it is likely that the problems of funding and enrollment will continue to challenge state colleges and universities for many years to come.

Some people think that the College Store is just a chapel. However, they do not know that there are discussion groups, yoga classes, multi-media activities, and various social events going on there. The College Store is also a place to meet and talk, whether or not you're a student. We invite you to come to the College Store with us. Watch the OMEGA's next week for a list of activities at the College Store.

The King and The Plague

Michael Vieras

Once upon a time in a kingdom called Boyden (the English translation is Bridge over Waihau, in Oregon), there was a terrible, terrible plague. This plague affected all the residents of the kingdom from the lower state to Oregon in the far off island Land Thred. The King, Hon. Adrus I, called a public meeting to be held in the upper before the taille of Bagua Hall, the Royal Police, on Friday the 13th. The King's brother-in-law and he be accompanied by the harshest of the harshest. "I know not what you be doing anyway. I'm here to show you how it's done. King!" King Bran called in his advisors from the A.G.S. (the Association of Great States) to describe the problem that was upon them.

It seems that the plague had infested the Kingdom from a Consumers source was, spreading like "Red Fire." The symptoms of the plague was a formity of a palsy in the body of the subject and the inability to get all their aim's on their hands only to the Kingdom. There also was a fear that the King was sick. The doctors are the Royal Beautiful Church and all the brave men within Seminars - both of which are sponsored by the A.G.S. and the Priests of Oregon. Also beer and beer were attending the assemblies, sponsored by the A.G.S., which were conducted in some of the greatest homes in the Empire. The Trains of Despair, Gold, Sickness, and Mortality were drawing them and less attention was shown to the saving of the State.

King Drus decided to make a public appearance on the kingdom 's newspaper, to see if there were any genius's who could cure the disease. Upon arrival all the offices be knocked down and every writer of an Irish setting with his pens, the King was looking for a savior, Jack, the Court Jester appeared and explained, "I am the only one who helps the poor punch, and I think that I should not be run into again a time of need!" cried the King.

They all have a palsy from the plague, except for a group of men and prostitutes who scratch out some phrases for us and are of some help.

"This is our chance! Jack, send a notice to the newspapers of the country, asking those who can save us from this plague." To this, Jack set out to the corner of the street, where there was a sign for the newspaper, the Oregonian.

The newspaper is, contrary to belief, contrived to be a member of the Coast Guard, proudly, and in the nation's coastal waters' waters. - protecting lives and property on the high seas.

All that the school had been educating programs for a longer than I knew. But, I find that if I had not been for a course that was comprised this semester, I would be as incapable of teaching in some of the schools in secondary schools that I despise it so much. The reason I am going into teaching is, contrary to belief, that I will have a cure for the plague. I have a cure for the plague. It shall be done, and you shall see it!

"Marius," the King cried the drops of a few tears. "Do you really know a cure for the plague?"

"Yes, your majesty!" the King declared. "We shall have enough of this unceasing disease!"

The biggest heartache will be that day when it dawns on me that I cannot live up to my expectations. That day when a student says to me, "Teach me and make it fun, please," I shall say, "I am sorry. This will be my last day as your teacher!"

The biggest heartache will be that day! When I learn to be grateful for when I have been a success. The only thing I can do is that I have been a success. The only thing I can do is that I have been a success. But now I would like to help those who would like to help."

Christian Fellowship Searches for Hope and Reality

Two Minds

As an attempt to explore the ways by which we respond to reality through our "Pure Mind", with our rational mind we explore and collect and organize the objective world. It is the fear that our culture bears. The sacred, our intuitive mind, should also be considered. It is the source of inspiration, creativity, revelation and spirituality.

The two mentioned approaches are not opposed to each other. In fact they complement each other and working together we shall explore the posture of "Purity" which is a necessary stress to bring a creative balance between our intuitive mind and our rational mind.

SEARCH FOR THE SACRED

An attempt to explore the realm of the new spiritual quest, relate these roots to our own structure and create new ways of worshipping which never move beyond the traditional forms. The basis of this search is the expression of a "Loyalty to Direction", the quest for academic discipline and discovering the Sacred YES.

SUBVERTIAL PLAN

1. A way to move out of our "defensive anti-adult" into the awareness of the life that threatens us, with human resources that can free us to continue with the determining force that seeks to destroy us.

HELPING RELATIONSHIPS

- The people will be a reservoir experience. Others will never achieve such high peaks of realization. This seminar is designed to traverse the "people problem," helping people achieve more effective relationships between themselves and others whether he be or plan to be teachers, social workers, nurses, psychiatrists.

To be a CHRISTIAN

"There is always the option of the personal experience of a "Christian". The seminar seeks to help the crisis of hatred and faith through the process of personal experience of those relationships between what a human being and what a Christian does.

To be HOW TO HOPE AGAIN

"Christian" will become in use in this seminar. The seminar seeks to help the crisis of hatred and faith through the personal experience of the meaning of a "Christian". All seminars are open to the "Christian" and what a Christian does.

Rathskellar comes alive with Matthew & Peter

On Thursday, February 1, 1973, the Student Union presented an evening of musical entertainment with the aid of Matthew & Peter. The group consists of singer-songwriters Matthew, an accomplished stage performer, and Peter, a talented composer. Their style is a blend of folk, classical, and contemporary music, making them a versatile act for the student body.

The evening began with a two-song set that showcased the group's musical talent. Matthew's voice was clear and resonant, while Peter's guitar playing was intricate and melodic. The atmosphere was electric as the group interacted with the audience, creating a warm and engaging performance.

The second set featured a broader range of music, including a covers song of a Beatles classic. The group's harmonies were tight, and their renditions were both faithful and unique. The audience was captivated as they recognized popular hits with their own twist.

The third set consisted of original material, reflecting the group's creativity and originality. Matthew's lyrics were poignant and thought-provoking, while Peter's compositions were rich and evocative. The group's performance was a testament to their musical prowess and their ability to connect with their audience.

After the performance, the audience was left with a sense of awe and appreciation for the group's talent. Matthew & Peter's music is a reflection of their personal experiences and the world around them, making their performances not only musical but also a form of storytelling.

The evening was a success, and the group received a standing ovation from the audience, who were eager for more. Matthew & Peter's talent and dedication to their craft shine through in their performance, making them a truly memorable experience for all who attended.
The Bridgewater State hockey team closed out its season of pretournament month-long night and day drives with the largest victory of the season when the Bears recorded a 6-0 victory over Nichols College last night.

The Bears were left with a 16-4-4 record and were members of the New England Men's Hockey Conference, which consists of 12 teams. Nichols College is one of the members of the conference, and the Bears are the defending champions.
