Commentary:

Whose Union is it?

by Michael S. Resnick and Victoria L. Smidak

When few students at Bridgewater State College take an interest in the workings of the administration, the student representatives usually take the blame. But who is responsible for this lack of interest? Is it the students or the administration? How can we improve the situation?

The article is titled "At the Foot of THE HILL." It discusses the Student Union and its budgeting process. The Student Union is seen as a student-run organization, but the author questions whether students truly have a say in how the money is spent. The article raises concerns about transparency and accountability in the budgeting process.

The first paragraph of the article states: "At the foot of THE HILL, student representatives and the administration struggle to find a balance between the interests of the students and the needs of the college. The budgeting process is often seen as a source of conflict and frustration, especially for those who feel excluded from decision-making."

---

The article then goes on to discuss the budgeting process in detail, highlighting the various committees involved and the challenges faced by both students and administration. It raises questions about the level of transparency and how decisions are made. The author suggests that more efforts are needed to involve students in the process and increase their understanding of the administration's decisions.

The article concludes with a call to action for students to get involved and become more informed about the workings of the Student Union and the college administration. It emphasizes the importance of being a responsible member of the student body and participating in decision-making processes:

"Don't stand back and allow your college and your control over your own money to be taken out of your hands. No one wants government running everything, but we do want to have a say in what goes on around us, and we want to be informed. It's your best interests. Get involved, or at least get interested in what goes on around you. COMMENTARY reflects authors' opinions, not editorial statements."

Roaches, Potheads & Buzzes

by Suzan

Roach control to what you may have heard is hard. Roaches don't come to a campus any more than buzzes do. Buzzes don't come to the Student Union any more than roaches do. Roaches, not that kind, mean the ones that crawl, eat and multiply in the garbage behind you. Buzzes, not the insect, mean the buzzing things that come to your mind when you think about the Student Union.
