Dear Editor:

In response to last week's letter criticizing the resident student advisor, who we all know, had his hands full. Most of the reason for these periodic tirades at staff has been the Resident Student Handbook pg. 30, 26, 1979. We out here in Almeida's discontinued service rather than giving residents the “white shirt treatment.”

Dear Editor:

In response to last week's letter criticizing the apartment controversy resident who we all know, had his family moved to another state.

First of all, the reason for these periodic provocations is that the Resident Student Handbook, p. 35 states: "It is not in the interest of health and safety. It is improper to bring overcrowded facilities to make the situation worse.

The workshops can be prevented if residents understand the importance of nutrition, the role of the immune system, and the need for proper hygiene.

During the period that was specified in the letter, our apartment was occupied by a student who was not authorized to be there. This student violated the College's policy and was asked to leave. It is unfortunate that this incident occurred, but it does not justify the author's claims.

New Boston Edison Alumnae

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my disappointment with the lack of recognition given to the contributions of New Boston Edison Alumnae (NBEA) to the school. NBEA has a long history of supporting the school and its students, and has been instrumental in the development of many important programs.

NBEA's efforts have been highlighted in the Comment, a student-run newspaper. However, I believe that more could be done to recognize the contributions of NBEA members and their families to the school. I urge the administration to consider providing a list of NBEA members and their achievements to the school community, and to include NBEA in the planning and decision-making processes of the school.

Sincerely,

Dear Editor:

I am writing to express my concern regarding the lack of food available for residents in our apartment complex.

I was surprised to learn that the only food available for residents is the food provided by the vending machines. This is not sufficient to meet the needs of the residents, who have a wide variety of dietary restrictions and preferences.

I urge the administration to consider providing a more comprehensive food service to meet the needs of the residents.

RACKing Them Up: Energy Savers

by Robert A. Coy

It is no secret that power costs are high, or "environmental" to use a politically correct term. For the university campus, a combination of energy-hungry buildings and a large student population is a surefire recipe for high energy bills. To combat this, the Student Union sponsored a symposium on energy conservation for students and faculty. The symposium featured presentations on energy conservation techniques, solar power, and renewable energy sources. Attendees learned about the latest technologies and practices that can help reduce energy consumption and costs. The event was a success, with many attendees expressing interest in implementing energy-saving measures on their own campuses.

Worst Places to Study

by Roger

It's getting to be the last few days of the semester. Most students, including myself, are miserable. In addition, I have to work a part-time job and have to do all this in 24 hours a day. After seeing this, I had to do what I could for my grades. The only thing I can do is study and make sure I don't fail...and then I'll be able to get a job.

First, the bathroom. I'm the first to admit that there are a lot of浴室 that have been used and left. There is a lady who always uses the bathroom. She always leaves her stuff in there. There are a lot of people there who don't like the bathroom. There is a lot of dirt and things that go on in the bathroom. There are also a lot of people who have been there. It's a bathroom, but it seems to me that there are a lot of people who don't like it. I don't know what it is, but there are a lot of people who don't like it.

The second worst place is the library. The library is always crowded. There are a lot of people in the library. It's a crowded place. There are a lot of people who don't like the library. It seems to me that there are a lot of people who don't like it.

The last place is the union. The union is always crowded. There are a lot of people in the union. It's a crowded place. There are a lot of people who don't like it. It seems to me that there are a lot of people who don't like it.

How NOT to Study

In the final category of don't-wanna-study other open places other than the library. Here are a few suggestions for doing what not to study. If you are going to study in the library, make sure you don't leave your books out. If you are going to study in the union, make sure you don't talk to the people around you. If you are going to study in the union, make sure you don't have a lot of people around you.

Soviet Trip Reviewed

Soviet tourists have expressed their dissatisfaction with the country's squalid conditions and the inefficiency of its transportation and communication systems. The tourists, who were on a three-week trip to the USSR, were frustrated by the slow pace of the journey and the limited facilities available to them. They complained about the lack of information about the country and the difficulty of obtaining it. The tourists also expressed their concerns about the high cost of living in the USSR and the lack of availability of food and other essential goods. They were also critical of the poor quality of the accommodations and the lack of proper facilities for tourists. The tourists were also troubled by the limited access to cultural and recreational facilities and the lack of opportunities for tourists to interact with the local population. The tourists' experiences highlight the need for improvements in the country's infrastructure and services to better accommodate tourists and improve their comfort and convenience.
The Lindmark Report

It has often been said that we humans are creatures of habit, performing the same actions every day in the same way. A survey of college students across the country revealed something very peculiar among habits. When, during their study sessions, students would cover the openings of their books, it was noted which portions of the book they would be reading from. The results showed that most students, regardless of their field of study or their grade point average, would cover the same areas of the book with their hands. One student even revealed the same areas of the book, everyday, and the study team concluded that this pattern of behavior was universal among college students. The study also found some people who had very unique habits. Danielle S., of Providence, Rhode Island, who always braced her right hand against the right side of her book when reading, explained to the study team that she did this to help her keep her body in place while reading. The right-handed Danielle found it easier to stay upright with her right hand on the book, and the left-handed students found it easier to keep their body from falling over with their left hand on the book. The study findings were presented at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association. The results of this study are expected to have significant implications for educators, who may find that these findings can help them design more effective study programs. The study also suggests that educators may want to consider the habits of their students when designing study programs, as the habits of students can affect their ability to learn.
