Canada's Bear of Beers is here!

Down from the North Woods of Canada comes Grizzly Bear. Not just another Canadian beer, but a rare breed of brew. An authentic Canadian lager—naturally aged, so it's remarkably smooth. With a flavor no other Canadian beer can stand up to. The bear of beers is here.

Tennis Court Completion in Sight

The revision of the tennis courts behind the Student Union building has been a long and tedious process. The idea started approximately seven months ago as former president of the Student Government Association (SGA), Paul A. Dobson, issued the idea and a campaign proposal. After being elected as president, Dobson had the project approved and then put it in the hands of Planning and Development, headed by Mr. Lou Perry. Perry contacted contractors and arrived at an estimate of $33,000. The money was to come from two sources: the SGA and the Athletic Department, plus any money received as donations.

About one year later, the current SGA president, Daniel Maggio and Dobson were informed that the project was $7,000 short. Dobson was unprepared. "Administration dealt with the contracting because we didn't know state and federal regulations, we didn't want to deal with...to avoid a hassle we put the project in the hands of Lou Perry. He did not fully inform us of all money appropriations," as a result of the shortage, new funding will not be put up around the courts as the money was not available for construction. During this past summer, Maggio talked to one of the construction workers and made an amazing discovery. Stated Magazine, "For $5,000, the old surface could have been torn up and a new one put in (made of concrete) and the cracks were fixed and the old surface removed...I didn't understand why the administration didn't take advantage of this." When asked what took so long for the project to get underway, Maggio replied "We purposely brought the project up slowly, we wanted it to be a campus issue which is why the committee looked into it. We were also delayed by the Board of Trustees, who have been making changes all along. The Trustees did not want the project until mid-July." Maggio said that he did not know they had to try to get the project in by mid-July, although he had nothing to base his information on. The courts are still available to everyone on campus and will contain two half-court courts, two tennis courts, and as usual for handball or racquetball. Landscape plans are still in question due to the shortage in funds.

WASHINGTON — A lumber company whose former general counsel heads the U.S. Forest Service has failed to pay fees for an area protected from federal logging.

The Forest Service, which manages national forests, said it had failed to pay fees for a portion of the land it manages because it did not have a valid permit to harvest timber. According to internal documents obtained by the Center for Public Integrity, the company failed to pay the fees for 13 years before it finally made the payment in 2018.

The company, which represents the position that it is not required to pay the fees, has appealed the decision. On Friday, a federal judge ruled in favor of the Forest Service, finding that the company had not shown that it was entitled to the fees.

The judge's decision is the latest in a series of legal battles over the fees, which have been the subject of controversy for decades. The fees are intended to cover the costs of managing the national forests and ensuring the long-term health of the forests.

The Forest Service has repeatedly said that it is unable to collect the fees because it lacks the resources to do so. The company, however, has argued that the fees are not necessary and that they violate its First Amendment right to limit government activity.

The judge's decision is expected to be appealed by the company, which has said it will do so. The case is likely to go to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

The Boston Globe's new "All of Me" nostalgia survey asks: "What is the most popular nostalgia survey?" The results are not surprising, but the question itself is difficult to answer. The respondents were then surveyed again to determine if the exposure to the survey "All of Me" stimulated their nostalgia.

Most of the people surveyed were from the Washington D.C. area. NO HELP FROM MEXICO: Mexico continues to be a major conduit of illegal drugs into the United States and, according to a recent study by the Mexican government, the drug trade in Mexico has been growing steadily. The study found that drug trafficking in Mexico has increased by 300% in the past five years. For further information, contact the drug enforcement center in Mexico City. A significant amount of the drug trade in Mexico is associated with the drug cartels in Mexico. The cartels are responsible for most of the drug trafficking in Mexico. For more information, contact the Drug Enforcement Center in the United States.

In the latest survey, the respondent group was asked to rate the "All of Me" nostalgia survey on a scale of 1 to 5. The respondents rated it an average of 3.5 out of 5.0.

"All of Me" Surprise Comedy Hit

By John J. Beaton

"All of Me" (dir. Garry Marshall) is a roller-coaster ride of heartbreak, love, and redemption. The film is a testament to the power of second chances and the transformative potential of love.

Roger Cobb (Steve Martin) is a famous stand-up comedian to screenwriting partner Edwina Cutwater (Lily Tomlin). Together, they are the stars of a popular stand-up show at the Charles Playhouse. The show has shattered all records and is considered the longest running show in the city.

When Roger Cobb shows up to the bar, he is seen as a second-rate task for a high-end establishment. However, with good reason, he is not to be dismissed. Martin's performance as Cobb is wonderful. He aptly portrays the character of someone who is rich, eccentric, and a bit of a mess. And Edwina ends up being the guru who understands no English but is the best supporting role in the film. His naivete for American customs creates more comedic genius in rare form.

"The Jerk", "Plaid", and "The Jerk" are all three also directed by Reiner. Martin's performance as Cobb is wonderful. He skillfully captures the character of someone who is being used in two dimensions. He also plays the character of someone who is trying hard to look natural and the results are stunning.

Lily Tomlin's role as Edwina is a mix of humor and heartbreak. However, Tomlin's performance is unique and perfect. She brings to the screen the perfect blend of comedic talent and depth. Her role is a roller-coaster ride of heartbreak, love, and redemption.

The film is a roller-coaster ride of heartbreak, love, and redemption. The film is a testament to the power of second chances and the transformative potential of love.

Boston's 1984-85 theatre season will include a major milestone when Shear Madness celebrates its 5th year of continuous performance at the Charles Playhouse. The show has broken all records and is considered the longest running show in Boston history. With over 1,700 performances, the show has cemented its place in Boston's theatre history.

The phenomenal success of the show has spawned satellite companies equally accomplished with their respective acts. After that, the Garrick Theatre. Shear Madness will continue its trend and will be on its third season of Six Madness p.4
PRINCE REIGNS

By Audrey Little
Entertainment Editor

Prince's latest, Purple Rain (the soundtrack to the movie of the same name) is a lively album of many styles and influences, ranging from Jimi Hendrix to Smokey Robinson. The music is funky, with bits of gospel, blues, and acid rock mixed in for a very unique sound.

Purple Rain opens with "Let's Go Crazy," which stars Prince pouting about life and the afterworld, accompanied by catchy organ. The tune's message is: "I'm going to die, don't care for your soul, mine has already been won." Prince's vocals are cold. By contrast, "Knockin' on Your Door ..."

John J. Beaton reviews the new album by Tightrope:

"Tightrope" is a bouncy pop song that has the energy of Hendrix's "Purple Rain". It's a catchy, upbeat tune that is very enjoyable. The music is well-produced, with a strong guitar riff that nearly

“Tightrope” Lacks Timing

By John J. Bennett

Staff Writer

Clint Eastwood is lucky he has such huge success at the box office. If he didn’t, the producers of “Tightrope” would have thought twice before obtaining it. Considering that Eastwood’s name has continually pulled big bucks for Hollywood, co-producer Peter Maxes decided to cut corners on the budget, knowing full well that he’d more than double his money. With his name right there on the marquee, a major disappointment.

Eastwood plays Detective Wes Block, homicide inspector for the New Orleans Police Department. Block is tracking down a sadistic murderer throughout the New Orleans French Quarter. Block is drawn to the seamy side of life where the killings are taking place. Curiously, he also had contact with two of the women who were raped and recovered, a fact which does not look good in the investigations. “Tightrope’s” biggest problem is that it lacks timing. Director Richard Tuttge does a fine job of pacing the story through the streets of New Orleans with no particular focus — he needs to be an aimless wandeler. His direction of photography, Bruce Surtees, has the lighting so dark that some scenes are nearly rendered unwatchable.

Eastwood looks bored with his role, surprisingly enough. Block doesn’t handle a gun the way Dirty Harry does. His co-star, Strictly Bujold (“Cobra”), plays a woman who is in charge of the New Orleans Rape Center and who is drawn into the case on a professional level. Bujold’s acting seems much too deliberate, she delivers her lines with an emotion and she seems detached from the case she is handling. “Tightrope” lacks the tension and excitement that made so many of Eastwood’s films successful. If it had won off most of these elements present, the film wouldn’t have to worry about being compared in such various fashion. It is simply disappoints into a black hole.

The Comment Thursday, September 28, 1984

Ann Lucey, John Ruggerio, and Mazzaferro are at odds, for each has an opposing philosophy on what it means to be a Division I school. While Ruggerio is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school, Mazzaferro is focused on the quality of life for students. They are at odds because their beliefs are fundamentally different.

Ruggerio bases his belief on the need to prove oneself amongst the best. As far as Ruggerio is concerned, the lack of money, however, did not have an effect on the team's morale. To him, the money was spent on things that he felt were necessary for the team to be successful.

Ruggerio's philosophy is that the team should dress. Ruggerio contends that he is getting the team dressed, or three players on a football team to be filled, instead of just being given the short end of the stick. To him, Mazzaferro's philosophy is to rely on a few individuals, but Ruggerio believes that this will not be enough to prove oneself amongst the best.

Mazzaferro is not so sure. He states, since the school is not a Boston College or a University of Pennsylvania, Mazzaferro is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school. While Ruggerio is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school, Mazzaferro is focused on the quality of life for students. They are at odds because their beliefs are fundamentally different.

Both Ruggerio and Mazzaferro agree that the team should dress. Ruggerio contends that he is getting the team dressed, or three players on a football team to be filled, instead of just being given the short end of the stick. To him, Mazzaferro's philosophy is to rely on a few individuals, but Ruggerio believes that this will not be enough to prove oneself amongst the best.

In closing, Ruggerio would like the student body to perceive these changes as some sort of experiment, done for the good of all. "I know for a fact that I will be the best to drop the team's planned Junior Varsity schedule because of the lack of money, then the coach should be able to do the same. " Ruggerio contends that he is getting the team dressed, or three players on a football team to be filled, instead of just being given the short end of the stick. To him, Mazzaferro's philosophy is to rely on a few individuals, but Ruggerio believes that this will not be enough to prove oneself amongst the best.

Concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school, Ruggerio is focused on the quality of life for students. They are at odds because their beliefs are fundamentally different.

Mazzaferro, on the other hand, is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school. While Ruggerio is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school, Mazzaferro is focused on the quality of life for students. They are at odds because their beliefs are fundamentally different.

Mazzaferro replies saying that he is not a "flexible" dictator, but there is a need to cut costs. As far as Ruggerio is concerned, the lack of money, however, did not have an effect on the team's morale. To him, the money was spent on things that he felt were necessary for the team to be successful.

Mazzaferro is not so sure. He states, since the school is not a Boston College or a University of Pennsylvania, Mazzaferro is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school. While Ruggerio is concerned about the financial implications of being a Division I school, Mazzaferro is focused on the quality of life for students. Campus Horrific Cases Drop Off; Suicide Disorders Increase

Suicide Rates Rise Among College Students

The higher incidence of college student suicide rates and the fact that many college students attribute much of their stress to the nonexistence of meaningful goals in their lives was the topic of discussion of the National Conference on College Suicide Prevention in Washington, D.C. A recent study of college students conducted by the American Association of University Professors found that nearly one in four college students surveyed reported having seriously considered suicide at least once in their lives. The study also found that nearly one in ten college students reported having attempted suicide at least once in their lives. The study also found that nearly one in ten college students reported having attempted suicide at least once in their lives.

In addition to the increased incidence of suicide, there has been a corresponding increase in the number of college students seeking counseling services for stress-related issues. A recent survey of college counseling centers found that nearly three in four students who sought counseling services reported experiencing stress-related issues, including anxiety, depression, and academic pressure. The study also found that nearly one in five students reported experiencing suicidal thoughts.

The increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students has been attributed to a variety of factors, including the increased pressure on students to succeed academically, the increased competition for jobs, and the increased prevalence of mental health disorders such as depression and anxiety. The National Institute of Mental Health estimates that nearly one in five college students is affected by a mental health disorder.

The increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students has also been attributed to the increased availability of information and resources for students experiencing these issues. A recent study of college counseling centers found that nearly three in four counseling centers reported having increased their capacity to provide services for students experiencing stress-related issues.

In addition, the increased availability of online resources and support groups has been attributed to the increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students. A recent study of online support groups found that nearly three in four students reported finding comfort and support from online resources.

The increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students has also been attributed to the increased availability of mental health services on college campuses. A recent study of college counseling centers found that nearly three in four counseling centers reported having increased their capacity to provide services for students experiencing stress-related issues.

While the increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students is a serious concern, there are steps that can be taken to address this problem. First, students should be encouraged to seek help from counselors and other mental health professionals. Second, colleges and universities should continue to increase their capacity to provide services for students experiencing stress-related issues. Third, online resources and support groups should be promoted and supported. Fourth, mental health services should be made more accessible and affordable. Fifth, colleges and universities should continue to increase their capacity to prevent suicide and stress-related issues among college students.

The increased incidence of suicide and stress-related issues among college students is a serious concern and requires a multi-faceted approach to address.

Welcome, sports fans, to another edition of Bears Football. The Bears opened their 1984 season last Sunday by putting Framingham State, 34-6, in a convincing display of men's football. Despite the poor field conditions and the cold weather, the Bears maintained an overwhelming victory. The Bears' defense was key to this win, led by senior Bill D'Andrea, a three-year starter on the Bear defense. He led the opening stanza with two tackles and a pass breakup to keep the offense in the tempo for the entire game, which saw the Bears shut out the Framingham State offense.

In the second half, the Bears totally shut down the Ram's attack and added 16 more points to their tally, and the scoreboard read 34-6 when the final whistle blew. The Bears held their opponents to just 57 points on 54 plays. In the first four minutes, the Bears called 16 unanswered points. The Bears opened their scoring with a 32-yard field goal by senior Gary Cohen, a punter with the New England Patriots and 43 seconds later Ron Carponi scored a 31-yard field goal and made his way to the Ram's five-yard line. Brian Mahoney then took it for the score. The Bears defense kept the onslaught going when Bob Friedman blocked a punt and senior co-captain Jim Seidler picked up it for another Bears touchdown. In the second half, the Bears totally shut down the Ram's attack and added 16 more points to their tally, and the scoreboard read 34-6 when the final whistle blew. First-year men's soccer coach Steve Mazzulli is facing a 79-0, or 1984 season. He is looking to make it 200.
With a fall record of 6-7, he and his squad are senior co-captains Joe Mastropaolo and Marc Bazin, as well as Chris Thomson, a sophomore. The depth of the players feature a powerful and spikers Doreen Cahill, Judy Long, Judy Casell, Sr., and Kelly Cahill.

"We're optimistic," concluded Mazzulli. "We have a lot of talent, and should Mazzulli's plan succeed, they'll have a very good season."

On Monday, BSC played to a 1-1 tie against Westfield State University. In the second half, the Minutemen scored first and held the lead. The Minutemen will be playing this weekend against Bridgewater State University on Saturday, Oct. 22, at 2:00 p.m.

Tennis Court Completion in Sight

By John J. Beaton

It was a sad and bitter experience for the students of the Student Union building who had been looking forward to the completion of the tennis courts for months. The project had been delayed due to the lack of funds, and now it seems that the entire project has been scrapped.

The decision to cancel the construction of the tennis courts was made after several meetings with the Athletic Department and the Student Union. It was agreed that the funds would be redirected to other projects that were more urgent and necessary for the campus.

The closure of the tennis courts has caused a great deal of disappointment among the students who were looking forward to using the courts for recreation and exercise.

Where is Southeastern Mass?

By Ed Donahue

Sounds like one of those posters or trinkets, but it's no joke. Anyone living inside of Route 138, even in the Quincy area, could probably not tell you where places like Archibald's or Taunton, even Fall River or New Bedford, are located, and if you got lost, you wouldn't know what to do, except to keep going until you reached the nearest outlet. That is because when you talk about Southeastern Massachusetts, the region's success could never be measured for the college, too.

The Governor's visit didn't get a kick of a lot of press, but to the college's senior ranking for a job, the opportunities available in the southeastern area and other industries has got to look some weight. Southeast Mass. is going to be Southeastern Massachusetts.

Ruggiero's Policies Create "Concerns"

By Jeffrey Litan

On Saturday, September 23rd, the Bridgewater State College campus was buzzing with activity as the students prepared for the opening of the new academic year. The atmosphere was electric as the students welcomed the new students and eagerly anticipated the start of the academic year.

However, not everyone was pleased with the changes that had been made. Some students expressed concerns about the new policies and procedures that had been implemented. They felt that these changes had been made without adequate consultation and that they had not been given enough time to adjust.

The changes included new policies for student conduct, new academic requirements, and new financial aid policies. Despite the concerns, the students were determined to make the best of the situation and to make the most of their time at Bridgewater State College.
