Bears Business

By Mike Stoner Staff Writer

The College's volleyball team is in the top ten of the nation and the men's basketball team is on the rise. This year, the women's volleyball team has entered the ECAC championships for the first time. They finished their season on a winning note with a year-end victory over the Franklin and Marshall team. The Lady Bears finished strong, winning all but two of their senior season matches.

Women's Health

Volunteering for more than 50 hours in the ECAC championships is no easy task, especially for the Lady Bears. Their commitment to the game is admirable, and it's a testament to their dedication. The Lady Bears fought hard and proved that they are a force to be reckoned with in the ECAC.

The question of tariffs may be one of the few topics on the President's agenda that he is not considering. The President has been asked to consider a range of tariffs, but he has not yet made a decision on this matter. The President's views on tariffs are widely known, and he has expressed his support for the idea of a balanced budget. However, the President's position on tariffs may be influenced by the ongoing negotiations with other countries.

Women's Tennis Alive at Bridgewater State

By Mike Stoner Staff Writer

In the fall of 1983, the Bridgewater State women's tennis program was founded to encourage female participation in sports. The program is open to all women who wish to join, and it has quickly gained popularity. The team is coached by John Yocki, who is a former state champion and has many years of experience in the sport.

Women's Tennis has been a great success, and the team has been invited to compete in several tournaments. The team's success has been attributed to the hard work and dedication of the players, as well as the support of the coaches. The program is a great example of the value of sports in today's society.

Women's Tennis is a great way to stay active and healthy, and it is a great way to make new friends. The team is always looking for new members, and interested women are encouraged to contact the coaches for more information. The program is a great way to turn the page on a long winter and start the year off right.

Straight From the Shoe

Back by popular demand, The Comment is pleased to present this week’s edition of Straight From the Shoe, the weekly column by Gregory C. Mathis, Editor-in-Chief, which chronicles the many things william Magoon, has learned at MIT. This week’s column provides a glimpse into the workings of the commuter movement at MIT, as well as an inside look at the political climate on campus.

The Comment, May 10, 1984

Pacemakers of the political world are always on the lookout for young, energetic leaders who can help shape the future. In the case of the commuters, that role falls to Gregory C. Mathis, Editor-in-Chief. Mathis, a senior in electrical engineering, has been working on the commuter movement for several years and is well respected for his leadership abilities.

Mathis’s work on the commuter movement has not gone unnoticed. It was recently announced that he will receive the prestigious Young Voter of the Year award from the National Association of College Speakers. The award recognizes young people who have made significant contributions to their communities and who are likely to continue to do so in the future.

Mathis attributes his success to his passion for politics and his dedication to the commuter movement. "I’ve always been interested in politics," he said. "I started getting involved with the commuter movement my freshman year, and I’ve been hooked ever since."

Mathis’s involvement with the commuter movement has taken him all over the country, from New York City to San Francisco. He has met with leaders of the commuter movement from other schools and has participated in several national conferences.

Mathis is optimistic about the future of the commuter movement. "We’ve made a lot of progress in recent years," he said. "But there’s still a lot of work to be done."

Terror in the Aisles is a Scream

By Jeffrey Lowman

Terror in the Aisles, reviewed by Donald Pleasance and Nancy Allen. Directed by Charles Bronson, and centering on the psychology of the film.

As first glance it looks and sounds like just another slash-and-bash movie, a smoothly exploited film to make a quick buck. Yet the film is giving the impression of being the definitive document of the humanity genre. Terror in the Aisles is, in fact, both of these things and much, much more. It asks us a simple question, "Why, with so much violence and horror in the real world, do we live up in the movie theaters to see more?"

The approach to the horror genre in this film is rather unique, with each issue you find yourself reading the next issue in the story.

The approach to the terror in the film is indeed unique: this is not a standard setup for the audience's enjoyment. The experience is designed to keep you on the edge of your seat throughout the entire movie. By creating a sense of dread and anticipation, the filmmakers have managed to keep the audience engaged and invested in the story. The film is not afraid to push the boundaries of what is considered acceptable in horror cinema, making it a must-watch for anyone who enjoys the genre.
General Public: The Beat Goes On

By Audrey Little

The Beat Goes On

Twist and Shout! The (English) Beat goes on in the form of General Public, a group formed by Dave Wakeling and Ranking Roger after they left The English Beat last year. Mick Jones (ex-The Clash) plays guitar on some of the tunes on their debut album, All The Rage.

Side One opens with "'Hot You're Cool", a dance tune featuring Saxa, another Beat alumni, on saxophone. This tune reminds me of the material from Special Beat Service. "'Tenderness'" is a really pretty tune which has been receiving some airplay. This is one of my favorite tunes on the album. "Anxious" is slower and has more of a reggae sound. "Never You Done That" is another of my favorites and again reminds me of the Special Beat Service album. Side One closes with "Burning Bright", which has a heavier rock sound.

Side Two opens with "As A Matter Of Fact", which features some rapping at the beginning and is kind of funky. "Are You Leading Me On?" is a faster ska tune—much like The Beat's older material. "Day To Day" is less light-hearted than the rest of the tunes, and "Where's The Line?" features lots of brass sound. "General Public", which closes the album, is an anthem of sorts. This tune is reminiscent of some of The Clash's dubbing in reggae on Zen pantalla. Mick Jones must have had a hand in this tune. And, although The English Beat is no more, All The Rage shows that General Public might be the next best thing.

Russel, a member of the class of 1985, currently serves as the Projects Director at WRRM. By obtaining this position, Russ is in the highest ranking student at the station. Formerly, he served on the music staff, and ran a newspaper and a DJ. Also, on campus, Russ co-founded WRRM and was a member of the Women's Services Office.

Interests in Russ include non-mainstream movies and dialectical arguments, while playing guitar and writing are his hobbies. He enjoys playing a good game of pool and highly dislikes the Indians. Being in the media is what Russ really enjoys. He would like a technical or public relations job writing for a record company when he graduates from RSC in the spring. His interest in WRRM has greatly influenced Russ college career and projection for the future. WRRM has offered many opportunities to me in terms of both career and entertainment. Working in an organization of this size prepares people to approach the business world more adequately.

Although you cannot listen to Russ on the air, the music you listen to is a reflection of how far he has brought the station so far this semester. For the best variety of music found anywhere, listen to WRRM.

General Public: The Beat Goes On

By Audrey Linn
Entertainment Editor

Twist and Cradle! The (English) Beat goes on in the form of General Public, a group formed by Dave Wakeling and Ranking Roger (of the English pub rock group, The English Beat). Mick Jones (of the Clash) also gives general guidance of the group's second album, All The Rest.

For all intents and purposes, The Beat is the same band that has been receiving some acclaim. This is one of my favorite tunes on the album. "Anthem" is cleaner and has more of a reggae sound. "Never You Done That" is another of my favorites and again reminds me of the Special Beat Service album. Side One closes with "Living Bright," which has a reggae sound.

Side Two opens with "Hi.(You Feel so Good Tonight)." This song is one of my all-time favorites. "Living Like Me" is in favor that theme; much like The Beat's other material. "Day To Day" is less light-hearted than the rest of the tunes, and "Where's The Limit?" features lots of brass sounds. "General Public," which closes the album, is a mix of horns and voices. The group, and perhaps this album, is an attempt at fusion, but has not been too successful.

Time was the only song that had any commercial potential. It's 80-90% of the album, but I think the group has a lot more potential. The group has a lot more potential. The group has a lot more potential.

Gary Hart-Hyagen People Vote Democrat (from p. 3)

Most of these votes are concentrated in the cities. They are concerned about laws that will define the quality of life in the years ahead—the environment, the nuclear freeze and struggles for minority and women’s rights. They are political moderates and they want to believe that our best days are still to come.

What will they do in 1986? Richard M. Daley seems to have lost his own vote. If he doesn’t do something in the next few months, to satisfy both his own and the nation’s needs, his end could be within the year.

Most of these people are going to vote for the candidate who can give them the best chance of getting what they want. They are prepared to accept some of the same policies that are needed to get them what they want. They are prepared to accept what we obtain the most from them.

Gary Hart, in his sometimes too literal and sometimes too literalized job, is the only candidate who understands this. He can help but he won’t. He will win and he will lose. But he will win.

Consider three major issues: arms control, defense policy, and foreign policy.

Our arms control policy is being monopolized today by hardliners who confuse diplomacy with power, and who see the world as a zero-sum game. They think that we can either have a nuclear war or a nuclear freeze. They think that we can either have a nuclear war or a nuclear freeze. They think that we can either have a nuclear war or a nuclear freeze.

Gary Hart’s policy is the opposite of this. He believes that we can have a nuclear freeze and win the cold war. He believes that we can have a nuclear freeze and win the cold war. He believes that we can have a nuclear freeze and win the cold war.

Hart, in his sometimes too literal and sometimes too literalized job, is the only candidate who understands this. He can help but he won’t. He will win and he will lose. But he will win.

Gary Hart-Yong People Vote Democrat (from p. 3)

Most of these voters are decided to the core. They are concerned about issues that will define the quality of life in the years ahead—the environment, the nuclear freeze and struggles for minority and women's rights. They are the political vanguard and they want to believe that our best days are still to come.

What will they do in 1984? Ronald Reagan does not deserve their support. Walter Mondale does. He has earned it, and our future demands it.

Consider three major issues: arms control, deficits and personal liberty.

Our arms control policy has monopolized today by hardliners who confuse diplomacy with toughness. We must not reject the process. In fact, since 1972, we have closed every opening, scored every goal and missed every chance for an agreement. As a result, governments, whether hardline or soft, have simply outflanked us. Their weapons have become bigger, their budgets have soared out of control and their technology has been shared with unfriendly nations.

As hardliners, we must persuade the American people that we have an option and offer an alternative.

In a second area, deficits. The budget deficit today is the highest in American history. That is something every American should be alarmed independent-minded individuals are no longer to be trusted.

In the past four years, the deficits—$110 billion a year in 1979, $200 billion a year in 1980, $250 billion a year in 1981—have soared and so have the interest payments on the debt. We are mortgaging our future to pay for a Cold War that is no longer necessary.

Finally and perhaps most important, the Reagan campaign makes as entirely wrong assumptions about today's young voters—-that they are self-centered and self-indulgent, that they care nothing for others and that they have no understanding of the Cold War. Young voters are so shortsighted if they do not recognize the threat of the nuclear freeze. They simply do not know the threat. No young voter knows the threat to our future demands it. Ronald Reagan does not understand.

Our young voters are no longer to be trusted by those in power. Instead, they will be trusted by others who recognize the threat and the need of the nuclear freeze and who are willing to fight to end the Cold War.

These young voters care about those in need, but they are skeptical of Government when it perpetuates its own failures. Whether something is liberal or conservative is less important than whether it works.

Our young voters are not the 1936 version of those in spirit will choose the national interest and vote for theAdministration. Gary Hart can choose the national interest and vote for the Administration. Gary Hart can choose the national interest and vote for the Administration.

RESCIPTE: One Response to a Recognized Need

By Carolyn Soper and Mark Wurster

Group Leaders in the Children’s Physical Development Clinic

On Saturday morning, October 27th, the Children’s Physical Development Clinic was privileged to hear a lecture given by Albert Schumacher, Director of South Shore Respite Care Center in Mattishell, Mass. Schumacher related to the clinic the importance, purpose and need of respite care in the community.

Respite, literally defined, is an interval of temporary relief or rest. As discussed by Mr. Schumacher, the respite is intended for the parents and families of disabled and handicapped children. The need for respite was supported by the public, and was generally viewed as a lost rest rather than a necessary intervention. Due to the present state of respite funding, the funding was minimized until recently. Since 1981, a realization of the need for special education began. For some families, respite care is the only way to offer the only separation from the disabled child. This time can be used for shopping, going out to dinner, or even a weekend trip for the parents. The fact is that these disabled children require twenty-four-hour supervision every day, every hour. Most of them take for granted activities of daily living such as going to the bathroom or brushing their teeth. These are daily activities that they can’t even stand on their own two feet, but enough to chew food or swallow it.

Respite care often falls off for families with “severe need” children. “If keep the family in tact, by providing the family from becoming worn out.” Respite care is meant to be an intervention rather than a last resort.

For respite care to be effective, the parents must be comfortable with the concept of the service. For example, a parent who is altering the center every hour after dropping their child off is not actually receiving service. There are some families who will not use respite facilities due to guilt. Others may be afraid to use their hours since a “real emergency” arises. The presence of continual care support to the families is a significant advantage. On the other hand, there are families who will go to great lengths to obtain respite care. “There was a period of time, a few years ago when no funding was available.” Upon hearing the advantages of the respite provided, the families would be voting against this idea.

Recognized by Albert Schmickel, Director of South Shore Respite Care Center in Marshfield, Mr. Schmickel relayed to the clinicians the importance, purpose, and need of respite care in the Children's Physical Developmental Clinic.

Respite, literally defined, is an interval of temporary relief or rest. As discussed by Mr. Schmickel, it is the respite that is needed for parents and families of disabled and handicapped children. The need for respite care was supported by the public and was generally viewed as the service. The need for respite care was questioned, the family was aided in their problem. At the request of the family, was a period of separation from the disabled child. This time can be used for everyday life with the exception of constant care, the parents must be comfortable with the concept of the service. For example, a parent who is calling the center every hour after dropping their child off is not actually receiving respite care. There are some families who will not use respite facilities due to guilt. Others may be afraid to use their hours in case a "real emergency" arises. The presence of continual care people (clinician), shift supervisors, maintenance crew, etc. The program really is an intervention rather than a necessity. There has been, however, an emphasis on the need for effective respite care. The new service, the Shore Unit, was funded in part for the benefit of the public. There are more people interested, but sional growth.

Women’s Tennis Alive at Bridgewater State

By Mike Storey

Staff Writer

In the fall of 1983, the Bridgewater State women’s tennis program was forced to cancel their season because they were unable to field a team to compete. The two or three girls that did try to play had to rely on their efforts to make sure the team was as good as it could be. The girls were really good, but the program was forced to cancel their season for a variety of reasons. In the fall of 1984, the Bridgewater State women’s tennis program did a complete about-face. The program had a complete reconstruction of the coaching staff and made sure they had the best possible team. The team was able to field a solid team of seven players. The team included seven freshmen, two sophomores and two seniors.

A year after a new staff began, the Bear women’s tennis program began to take shape. The Bear women’s tennis program began to improve. The team began to win some matches and was able to field a solid team of seven players. The team included seven freshmen, two sophomores and two seniors.
